Find Articles: You Have a Citation

Use it for: Looking for a specific article you already have the citation for or for a journal title online.

Why use it? Because it saves you time by searching for a journal through all our databases at once.

Step 1

Go to the Gelman Library website <http://www.gwu.edu/gelman> and click on "E-Journals."

Step 2

Search for the title of the journal, magazine, or newspaper your article is in (take out any beginning article, such as "the" or "an").

Can't find your article?

If you can't find your article online, check the ALADIN Catalog to find out if the journal is available in print at Gelman or one of the other libraries. You can request then request the article and get it electronically! |

Step 3

Look in your results for GW. The links next to it tell you:

1. Database(s) that have full-text for this journal
2. Years full-text is available—was your article published within these years?

Step 4

Click the link(s) next to GW to get to your article. You will be prompted to login if you're off campus.

- If multiple databases have full-text, clicking on the links will open a new screen. Choose the database that has full-text for the year you're looking for, add your citation information, and click "Go" to get to your article.
- If only one database is listed, clicking on the link will take you directly to the journal, where you can browse for your article.

Did You Know?

If your article isn't available online or in print, we can still get it for you! Just request it through Interlibrary Loan, and we'll get you a copy from another library.
