Q.28 Now I am going to read you a statement about what some call a "fair society." After hearing the statement please tell me whether this would make you much more likely, somewhat more likely, a little more likely, no more likely, or less likely to support a candidate for president who fights for the principles in this statement.

A fair society is one in which nobody is left behind. This is not just a promise, but a new America where anyone who seeks work can get a job, nobody can be cheated out of their pension rights, and all health care is accessible to everyone so nobody will ever have to choose between buying medicine and food.

Please tell me whether this would make you much more likely, somewhat more likely, a little more likely, no more likely, or less likely to support a candidate for president who fights for the principles in this statement.
